Slavery and the Blacks in California.

"Cantorna, with an its wickedness and iterased hells, will not stoop for a moment to the meanness of Northern States in succumbing to Slavery. A case occurred in one of our 'towns' recently, in which a man had his slave brought before a Judge which a man had his slave brought before a Judge to compel nim to obedience. The Judge heard the parties at length, and then gave his decision at length, the cream of it being: "As we found no Slavery in the country when we came here, the Court acknowledges no such peculiar institution, and the man is at liberty to go where he chooses," Very soon after, however, he was brought in by a crowd, again, to answer for having committed an assault and battery upon his master, knocking him down, &c.; and also for resisting the Sheriff who attempted to arrest him. Arguments were again heard, at the close of which the Judge said: "As the Sheriff attempted to arrest him without a writ, the man was justifiable in his resistance; and as his so-called master had no right to lay his hand upon the man, the latter merely acted in and as his so-called master had no right to lay his hand upon the man, the latter merely acted in scif-defense; and there was, consequently, no cause of action." So he was again at liberty. It is astonishing how soon they learn the meaning of that word, and practice its precepts. They are a very happy set of fellows here, as they do just as they please, and the most grumbling I hear about it comes from our own mean Yankees, whom the negroes laugh at for their value of a picayone. One negroes laugh at for their value of a picayune.
